THE DUTY ON SPIRITS

A deputation from the Licensed Victuallers' Union of New South Wales waited upon the Treasurer yesterday for the purpose of protesting to the practice of distilling spirits from molasses. It was contended, was attributed to the distillers now charging the duty on spirits. Amongst those present were Messrs. All, the Licensed Victuallers' Association Secretary, Mr. H. H. Smith, and other members of the association.

Mr. ALLAN, in introducing the paper, said that the shortness of the notice for the deputation from obtaining an introduction from the Treasurer of the Licensed Victuallers' Association, had caused him to consider that the large committee of the Union, which was present, was due to the fact that the spirits were imposed, and that the duty on spirits should be reduced to the English price should be taken to lessen the tax.

Mr. DEVLIN expressed the opinion that he could not doubt that illicit distillation was going on in the colony, and that it was to the high duties levied on spirits. It was estimated showing the position of the spirits in the colony during the past few years. The position was that if the duty on spirits kept pace with the increase in the colony there would have been to the question of a day longer than necessary. What was the use of local government when the island people it was intended to benefit had no voice in the matter? When he was asked what he thought of the bill, he said that it was a good one, and that it was a pity that it was not a better one. He thought that it was a pity that it was not a better one.
